Assoc. Prof. Dr. Zeynep Oktuğ
Istanbul Kultur University
Department Psychology, Turkey

Keynote Title: “Humor: A pathway to happiness”

Abstract: Happiness is one of the basic purposes in life. Research on happiness has long emphasized the effects of external life events and demographic variables, but there are consistent findings that after a period people adopt to negative or positive life events and reach their usual levels of happiness. Furthermore, demographic variables have also low effects on overall happiness. Some researchers focused on personality traits to explain differences in happiness. It has been found that four personality traits have strong relations to happiness: Extraversion, internal locus of control, self-esteem and optimism. There are two mechanisms, through which these traits are functioning. While temperamental mechanism makes people feel positive or negative emotions, instrumental mechanism make people search for activities that are useful for maintaining happiness. On the other hand, there are sufficient research to point out that the adaptive styles of humor positively correlate with happiness. Four humor styles, namely, affiliative, self-enhancing, aggressive and self-defeating humor, have different effects on well-being and happiness. While affiliative humor facilitates relationships and reduces interpersonal tension, self-enhancing humor helps to develop a different perspective in order to see the acceptable side of something that happened. Aggressive humor is used for attacking and humiliating others, whereas self-defeating humor involves making fun of oneself in order to gain approval from others. Affiliative and self-enhancing humor are adaptive, aggressive and self-defeating humor are maladaptive styles. Adaptive styles of humor have positive effects on happiness, whereas maladaptive styles show negative correlations. Among these styles, happiness has the strongest relation with self-enhancing humor. It can be said, people with high scores on four personality traits, namely extraversion, internal locus of control, self-esteem and optimism, can use self-enhancing humor as an instrument for reappraisal of life events in order to build a positive view about themselves and the current situation. Self-enhancing humor can serve as a strategy to regulate emotions, which in turn contribute to happiness. According to Broaden and Build theory, positive emotions can also serve as resources for enhancing personal effectiveness. Adaptive humor styles can contribute to maintain stable positive affect, which helps to display effective coping, having greater life satisfaction and achieve happiness. Because of its complex nature, the effects of adaptive and maladaptive styles of humor on happiness should continue to be examined.

Bio: Zeynep Oktug is an Associated Professor in Istanbul Kultur University, which she presently works since 2007. She is a graduate of Boğaziçi University, department of Guidance and Counselling and has a PhD degree in Organizational Psychology. Her main research interests are empowerment, work engagement and humor. She worked as head of Psychology Department between 2013-2017. Her book ‘Managing negativeness requires mastery’ was published in 2012, and ‘Innovation and work engagement: The effects of empowerment’ was published in 2014. Her articles were published and presented in national and international conferences. She continues carrying out her studies about examining the effects of humor in workplace.

Eylem Sönmez
Senior Psychologist/ Psychotherapist

Workshop Title: “Happiness! Where are you?”

Abstract: Happy people can be defined as people managed to adapt “here-and-now” principle into their lives. While living their happiness, happy people have the habit of noticing it. They enjoy the emotion that can be obtained by everyone, in fact. Then why do some of us miss happiness? Why do we sigh about “good old times”? at that moment, why can’t we notice we’re happy indeed.

This workshop will focus on the fact that happiness is generally not noticed while living and had to be remembered afterwards. Group work is aimed to make participants ask “what is happiness” and “how do we let it run away from us”.

Bio: She was born in 1976 in Ankara. She was graduated from Istanbul University Psychology department in 1998. She completed her internships in Bakirkoy Psychiatric Hospital, Capa and Cerrahpasa Medical Faculty Hospital clinics of neuroses – psychoses and social psychiatry. In 2002 she completed her master’s degree in Istanbul University and continued to take educations on clinical psychology. In 1999, she started to work in Private Goksoy Hospital (part-time). Same year, August earthquake in İstanbul had occurred and she participated support educations for post-traumatic stress obtained by Turkish Psychological Association and Behavioral Sciences Institute. She was a part of a psychological support team for earthquake victims for 6 months. In 2000, she started to work as a psychologist in Private French La Paix Hospital. In La Paix Hospital she worked with patients in neurosis and psychosis clinics, maintained individual adult in and out-patients’ psychotherapy processes, applied psychoanalytic tests and MMPI, participated group works, case presentations and seminars over 15 years. She provided training for hospital staff. Mainly worked with patients diagnosed with borderline and narcissistic personality disorder and anxiety disorders. Since 2003, she has participated a number of conferences, case presentations and seminars from numerous psychotherapists and psychoanalysts. She has been continuing her psychoanalytic process. She continues her works in Pandemos Individual Counseling Center that she is one of the founding partner.
